WEXNER CENTER AND FRANKLIN PARK CONSERVATORY COLLABORATE FOR UNIQUE AUDIO PLAY

Columbus, OH—With a special theatrical experience that is also a stroll in the park, the Wexner Center for the Arts and Franklin Park Conservatory will co-present *Susurrus, an audio play designed for botanical gardens by Glasgow playwright and director David Leddy. The show will run October 14–October 24, 2010 in and around Franklin Park Conservatory.

First presented to great acclaim and sell-out audiences in Glasgow, Susurrus (pronounced “sus-yoo-rus”) was a “Pick of the Fringe” at the Edinburgh Festival in 2009. A play without actors and without a stage, the subtly woven narrative intimately engages the audience members, who listen to it on iPods while following a mapped route specifically designed by the playwright through the lush greenhouses inside Franklin Park Conservatory and the outdoor grounds of Franklin Park, one of only five U.S. locations for the show. Due to the limited capacity of this show where only two patrons are admitted every 15 minutes during Franklin Park Conservatory’s hours, audiences are encouraged to book their time slots well in advance (see inset box for details).

Susurrus is part radio play, part recital, part lesson in bird dissection, and part stroll in the park. The listener hears snippets about opera, memorial benches, and botany, which fit together into a mournful and poignant story of a family’s love and loss. As the Guardian (UK) writes, “it’s a sensual reinterpretation of A Midsummer Night’s Dream with a contemporary edge. There are moments when location and content come together so powerfully that your eyes moisten and your heart lurches.” The work contains adult themes and is recommended for mature audiences.

Notes Wexner Center Director Sherri Geldin, “We’re thrilled to work with our colleagues at Franklin Park Conservatory on this 10-day event, which exemplifies the spirit of cultural collaboration that is prevalent among institutions in Columbus right now. Susurrus reflects the excellence we can achieve together and highlights the best of each organization’s offerings.”

Bruce A. Harkey, Franklin Park Conservatory’s executive director, says, “We are always looking for fresh ways to bring new audiences to Franklin Park Conservatory. Working with a talented theater artist like David Leddy in collaboration with the Wexner Center is an exciting prospect and opens up the potential for future joint efforts.”

Susurrus* is “beautiful...a magical blend of sorrow, anger, compassion, excellent writing, and magnificent music.”—The Scotsman

Patrons will be required to make a refundable $100 credit card deposit at Franklin Park for use of the iPod and headphones.

Charles Helm, Director of Performing Arts at the Wexner Center, notes, "Susurrus was one of the most impressive shows I saw at the Edinburgh Festival last year. Not only is it beautifully written and designed, but it is a great example of how contemporary theater is evolving towards unique experiences in special settings on an intimate scale."

ABOUT DAVID LEDDY

David Leddy is an award-winning playwright and director based in Glasgow, Scotland. He specializes in work that combines dramatic new writing with elements of performance art and unusual locations, ranging from a graveyard to a greenhouse, from a pitch-black cupboard to his own bedroom. He has been described as "Scotland's hottest, edgiest young playwright" by The Sunday Times, a "theatrical maverick" with a "propensity for fearless experiment" by the Financial Times, and a "brilliant site-specific theater-maker" who is "one of the most interesting dramatic writers on the Scottish scene" by Joyce McMillan in The Scotsman.
