

Pages Application

Pages supports the development of students' skills through the exploration of contemporary art, film, and performing arts. Throughout this yearlong, multi-visit program, students are guided to discuss, express, and document in writing what they learn while working with professional writers, artists, and educators in specially crafted experiences at the Wexner Center and at their respective schools. The curriculum fully engages both state and national education standards, and schools from throughout the state are eligible to apply to participate. Educators from the Wexner Center collaborate with high school teachers in developing writing-based learning opportunities. Each student keeps a journal for the duration of the program, crafts a piece of writing for each of the three experiences, and has an opportunity to publish their writing in a final anthology.

Pages offers:

- * Free programming (media arts, performing arts and visual arts)
 - * Bus subsidies for field trips to the Wexner Center
 - * Professional development for teachers
- * Each student receives a free journal and a copy of the Pages anthology

After reading the Pages program overview, how do you think a multidisciplinary arts and writing-based program would enhance or support your academic curriculum objectives?

☐ I understand that participation in the Pages program requires multiple contacts with teachers and students over the course of an entire school year.

☐ I am willing to attend the mandatory teacher orientation workshop and occasional brief professional development meetings after school during the school year.
